Col Cooper,

Thank you for considering my application to be USAFA's next Permanent Professor and Head of the Department of Astronautics. This position lies directly at the intersection of my passions for education, space, and officer development. The officer selected for this position will be responsible for guiding the continued development of a mutually beneficial relationship between USAFA and Space Force as space becomes increasingly important to America's national security. I believe my career has uniquely prepared me for the leadership USAFA needs to meet this challenge and maintain the institution's strong heritage of world-leading space education and officer preparation.

I am deeply committed to USAFA's mandate to take America's best and brightest young adults and develop leaders of character for the Air Force and Space Force. I have seen first-hand how important this mission is for the military and the nation, and I am proud to support it. I am also passionate about building teams that can accomplish more than any individual. At USAFA this includes recruiting and developing department faculty, empowering them to lead by example and teach officership in addition to engineering.

The Air Force and Space Force have provided me with skills, education, and experience that I believe will be invaluable for USAFA and the Department of Astronautics.

- I have five years of teaching experience at USAFA, including courses in two engineering departments. In addition to classroom instruction, course direction, and curriculum development, I have also led the Astro Department's new faculty training program.
- I have three ABET-accredited engineering degrees. My doctoral research consisted of development and zero-g flight test of spacecraft components funded by a NASA grant.
- I led USAFA's ongoing ABET-accreditation work for the Department of Astronautics. I also led the Engineering Division's 2024 Engineering Program Advisory Council (EPAC), a biennial external review ensuring that our engineering programs produce officers ready to meet the technical needs of the Air Force and Space Force.

- In response to a weakness identified by EPAC reviewers, I developed an experimental multi-department course combining technical skills and domain communication. This course is on track for inclusion in USAFA's Course of Instruction as Engr 201 in Fall 2026, and will be a requirement for two engineering majors.
- I have a record of academic research, including peer-reviewed journal articles and support of cadet research leading to student conference presentations.
- I have a record of demonstrated leadership excellence.
 - I served as Acting Squadron Commander for 5 months in USAFA Cadet Group 4. I led two Cadet Squadrons while their Commanders were on extended leave. This included maintaining good order and discipline, commissioning education, and successful preparation for USAFA's inaugural CULEX. In this role I served as a bridge between CW and DF, and directly contributed to cadet success, including AFCWI development. I also worked with USAFA's A1 and Space Detachment to determine USAFA's policy for selecting graduates for commissioning into Space Force.
 - I led a team of 29 intel analysts performing acquisition intelligence at the Defense Intelligence Agency. In this role I reversed a years-long cultural decline and restored trust between military members and DIA civilians in my 150-person office, and led two of my team leads to Directorate/Agency-level FGO-of-the-year awards.
- I also supported commissioning education at NC State's AFROTC Det 595 as a PhD student. When the Detachment Commander was relieved of duty, I coordinated coverage for three instructor positions and personally taught sophomore-level AS 222: Team and Leadership Fundamentals to 27 cadets, preparing them for success at field training directly after course completion.

USAFA established the nation's first undergraduate degree in Astronautical Engineering and maintains an absolute commitment to preparing every graduate with an astronautics background. This commitment has prepared countless officers for leadership in space, even those who unexpectedly ended up in national security space—including me.

I look forward to the responsibility of guiding USAFA and the Department of Astronautics through the ongoing rapid growth of Space Force and the space domain. I believe I have the skills, experience, and passion to succeed as USAFA's next Permanent Professor of Astronautics, and I look forward to the opportunity to discuss the position with you further.

JORDAN A. FIRTH, Lt Col, USSF
Assistant Professor

USAFA's mandate includes providing an exceptional education and recognition as an elite academic institution. The Engineering Division maintains ABET accreditation as a credible validation of USAFA's educational excellence. The Permanent Professor of Astronautics ensures accreditation by hiring qualified faculty and ensuring the Department of Astronautics satisfies ABET guidelines. My education and experience qualify me to teach Astronautical Engineering and have uniquely prepared me to lead the Department in ongoing excellence.

I have three relevant ABET-accredited engineering degrees.

- BS in Engineering Mechanics (USAFA, 2006) provided a foundation for engineering thinking and prepared me for hands-on engineering in Air Force assignments.
- MS in Astronautical Engineering (AFIT, 2011) introduced me to the basics of space engineering.
- PhD in Aerospace Engineering (NCSU, 2019) gave me the freedom to pursue independent learning and deep expertise in spacecraft component testing.

I have engineering education experience from two teaching assignments at USAFA (2014–2016, 2022–present), including instruction, assessment, and curriculum development.

- I instructed six courses in two engineering departments and served as course director for four of them.
- As assessment officer, I created a mid-cycle Department review and annual assessment reports to support the next ABET visit.
- I led the Engineering Division's 2024 Engineering Program Advisory Council (EPAC), an external review to ensure USAFA's engineering programs meet AF and SF needs.

My non-academic jobs have also prepared me to credibly lead an ABET-accredited engineering program.

- At Holloman AFB, I learned engineering practice performing hands-on work in flight test and rocket sled test.
- At Los Angeles AFB, I learned space acquisition and operations and cemented space lessons from AFIT.
- In a DIA assignment in Charlottesville VA, I gained invaluable leadership experience, reconstituting a 29-person branch after COVID while addressing long-standing cultural problems.

ABET accreditation provides more than just credibility; it actively improves the major and leads to better-prepared graduates. The accreditation cycle itself provides a framework for assessing and improving curriculum. In addition, evaluators provide expert feedback on program strengths and weaknesses. Finally, it provides engineering graduates with an ABET-accredited degree—a prerequisite for admission to nearly all graduate engineering programs in America.

Sustaining the culture of excellence necessary for accreditation requires continuous work. First, the department must continually recruit and develop qualified faculty members. In addition, the department must embrace engineering advances while maintaining excellence in fundamentals. Military assignment cycles provide a constant infusion of fresh engineering practices, but incorporating advances takes sustained and focused effort. I have significant experience identifying improvements and updating coursework to keep pace with engineering practice.

As one example, while serving as Division EPAC coordinator I identified communication as a curriculum shortfall across multiple programs. To address this shortfall, I pursued a three-semester project to incorporate new material into the Astronautical Engineering major with an experimental engineering skills course. After successful execution, I promoted a Curriculum Change Proposal to add Engr 201 as a requirement for two engineering majors, currently on track for inclusion in USAFA's Course of Instruction (COI) in Fall 2026. This change will explicitly provide instruction in engineering communication and will better prepare our graduates to lead in technically complex environments.

USAFA has long been a recognized leader in space education. The Astronautical Engineering major was the first of its kind to receive ABET accreditation in 1973. The Department has produced multiple foundational textbooks, as well as a series of successful FalconSAT spacecraft introducing major engineering advances.

While USAFA is well-positioned to maintain its legacy of excellence and leadership in space education, the Department must continue to stay abreast of changes in the field. In the near term, USAFA needs a Curriculum Change Proposal to update the COI's description of the Astronautical Engineering major. The COI contains a list of ABET's program requirements, but ABET has introduced new requirements for 2026 and beyond. Aligning the major to ABET's new requirements will subtly change Astronautics instruction and assessment over time.

If selected as Permanent Professor of Astronautics, I also intend to maintain USAFA's leadership in Space Engineering education with the following initiatives.

- Secure a permanent USSF 13S (Space Operations) billet for the Department to ensure an enduring connection to operational Space Force needs.

- Update textbooks. Many of the field's foundational textbooks were developed by USAFA but are due for a refresh to track developments in a rapidly changing environment.
- Promote regular discourse with the other North American schools offering space engineering programs—continuation of work I began in early 2025.

USAFA provides unparalleled leadership in space education and has taught Astronautical Engineering to more graduates than any other institution. I will be proud to sustain this legacy and ensure USAFA continues to offer the nation's premiere Astronautical Engineering degree.
